In general, sportsbooks aim to set their juice rates so that they can earn a profit regardless of the outcome of a particular event.

To calculate the juice as a percentage, we divide the amount of juice by the total amount wagered:

If a sportsbook offers odds of -110 on a particular game, this means that you would need to wager $110 to win $100, with the extra $10 representing the juice or commission charged by the sportsbook.

The juice can also vary depending on the type of bet being placed.

To explain it, let&#39;s say that a sportsbook offers the following money line odds for an NFL game between the Philadelphia Eagles and Kansas City Chiefs: Philadelphia Eagles +180 and Kansas City Chiefs -220.

Is there juice on futures wagers?
